

JC:
quote:

Not only is CBS a privately held brokerage, it appears not to be very stable if its problem with underwriters is evidence. Below is a list of companies that Rondberg has changed SEVEN TIMES in the past 13 years.

This is not unexpected. Chiropractic is in a class by itself and has market forces not seen elsewhere. Dr Rondberg could be trusted to do the right thing at the right time.

quote:

So, as long as any chiropractor subscribes to chirovangelism, he need not worry about being covered by CBS, but he cannot “try and diagnose disease.” I find it odd that on one hand, the Big Hypothetical claims to cure everything but rigor mortis, but if a DC actually diagnoses in any effort to develop a treatment plan or referral, he’s excluded from CBS coverage! Perhaps this explains why most chiropractors won’t talk about disease or symptoms for fear of losing their CBS coverage, and why Rondberg promotes the “non-diagnostic, non-therapeutic” brand of chiropractic, which illustrates how a vendor can mold a profession to suit his own business needs.

Again, Dr Rondberg is intellectually honest about the diagnostic capabilities of chiropractors.

quote:

the insurance carrier is the one who must get the insurance policy approved in each state, not CBS. That is the benefit of a company that only has chiropractic as its core business, such as NCMIC, a rival Rondberg has demonized repeatedly in his TCJ for obvious reasons.

How are we to trust you when you have no reservations at all about the conflicts of interest by NCMIC?

quote:

Constant themes in his thread of articles denigrate NCMIC coverage for supposedly not covering wellness care or infant adjusting, promoting diagnostics, and not supporting the infamous Subluxation Station. Incidentally, NCMIC now covers over 50% of DCs who understand it does cover the responsible practices of rational DCs despite the inflammatory demagoguery of CBS.

Does NCMIC cover a DC when he does his Applied Kinesiology incorrectly?

BTW, national board examiner Donna Craft promotes infant adjusting- do you have a problem with that?

quote:

This might explain the ploy of his WCA’s effort to restrain the scope of chiropractic to the care of the VSC only.

National Board Examiner Mary Ellen Rada is VSC only- do you have a problem with that?

quote:

Not only does Rondberg have obvious conflicts of interest with his CBS business, but examples of journalistic fraud in Rondberg's TCJ are replete when his editorial opinion is presented as fact to the readership, political issues are blatantly one-sided, and ad hominen attacks on the ACA, WFC, FCER, CCE, NCMIC leaders are commonplace.

You put on this chiropractic superhero cape when you attack his girlfriend, but when Dr Rondberg engages in philosophical reflection and policy debates, it's an "ad hominen"?

quote:

Rondberg's TCJ slogan is clearly: "I report, I decide for you." Maybe that explains why only approximately 240 chiropractORS out of 60,000+ align themselves with Rondberg!

I don't know how many belong to WCA but merely stating numbers is an populum fallacy. A belief is not true or false depending on how many chiropractors believe it. Moreover, we discussed ad nauseum that Dr Rondberg's beliefs are mainstream and well represented among state and national board members.

quote:

Moreover, with the downfall of Williams as the leading preacher on the chiropractic bully pulpit, Terry Rondberg via his TCJ now has assumed the quintessential role of political obstructionist and chiropractic propagandist within the chiropractic sect. Sadly, throughout his career, we have seen a litany of unethical behavior such as questionable salesmanship gimmicks, a telemarketing scam, lawsuits, complaints of interference from foreign chiro associations, journalistic fraud, and political misrepresentation of his WCA power base.

Good grief! You argue that Dr Ronderg has only 240 followers and then tell us about all this profession wide influence- which is it? The above is both biased and hearsay.

43% of your profession does applied kinesiology and you go on a rant about the subluxation station?

One site has it all. Your email accounts, your social networks, and the things you love. Try the new AOL.com today!